

The closest-fit O-notation for constructing a dictionary with n keys and their values using a dictionary comprehension is $O(n)$. Each insertion of a key–value pair takes constant time, $O(1)$, on average. Therefore, building a dictionary with n such pairs requires $O(n)$ total time, since the comprehension performs n insertions.