

1.  $O(n^2)$ , each time an additional element is added, it needs to be expanded and all existing elements copied. The total number of copies is at the square level.
2.  $O(n)$ , using the doubling expansion strategy means the system only needs to expand a few times (about a logarithmic number), and the total amount of extra copies it makes grows in a straight line with the data size.